

Planning for your Retirement

Planning for the lifestyle you want after you leave the workforce permanently should be an exciting time. It's also the time when you will be asking yourself some important financial questions, such as:

- how much money will I need in retirement?
- how long will my money last?
- will I be entitled to Centrelink benefits?
- what could I do now to improve my financial situation?

These can be daunting questions, especially when the latest research indicates that the majority of Australians will not have saved enough to fund a comfortable retirement.

Professional financial planning advice can be the difference between the lifestyle you want in retirement and the lifestyle you have to have. No matter how much or how little you have saved, or how close or far away retirement is, there are opportunities you can take advantage of to boost your super savings, and save tax along the way. What's important is you make sure you are in the best position to take advantage of the different opportunities to build your super nest egg.

Your first step is to seek professional financial planning advice, which can provide you with peace of mind in the lead-up to and throughout your retirement, as well as helping you significantly improve your financial situation.

How a financial planner can assist you achieve your financial goals

Your financial planner is there to provide you with the advice and decision support you need. They will work with you and look at your current and future income needs and determine whether or not you're on track to achieving the lifestyle you want when you permanently leave the workforce. For example, you may need to accumulate more assets, or you may find you are in a position to retire from the workforce earlier than you thought possible. Whatever your situation, your adviser will provide you with advice on a range of strategies including salary sacrifice, government co-contributions and transition to retirement options.

Being a SSS, SASS or PSS member presents you with additional financial opportunities. That's why it's important that the financial planner you select has expertise in the complexities of your particular scheme. By seeking expert advice you will help ensure you are in the best position to take advantage of the benefits which come from being a member of a defined benefit scheme.

Your financial adviser can provide you with a tailored financial plan which you will need to review on a regular basis. Over time, your income requirements and lifestyle objectives will change and a regular review will allow your financial adviser to fine tune your plan to reflect these changing needs and circumstances. As legislation around superannuation, taxation and social security rules is subject to changes, regular reviews of your financial situation will also enable you to take advantage of the opportunities these changes may present.
