

Contribution Arrears

Arrears of contributions can occur for a number of reasons. The most common reason is if you deferred your contributions during a period of leave without pay. Other reasons include a change in employment status (e.g. part-time to full-time) or a delay in your employer adjusting contribution deductions from your salary after a salary increase.

Your Annual Statement shows the dollar amount of contribution arrears that you owe to SSS. Arrears are only shown if the total amount owing is equal to at least 12 weeks contributions. Arrears totalling less than 12 weeks contributions are not shown, but must still be paid.

Interest on arrears

Interest is payable on contribution arrears in the following situations:

- arrears arising as a result of leave without pay
- if you leave employment and are re-employed with a SSS employer within 3 months and you choose to resume making contributions.

You may apply to the Trustee to waive the interest payable in special circumstances.

Interest is to be paid for the period from the date the arrears became due for payment until the date that all the arrears (and interest) have been fully paid. Interest is calculated at the scheme's investment earning rate and is compounded annually.

The interest that you pay on contribution arrears, if any, is added to your personal account. It is also regarded as a non-concessional contribution and will be added to the tax-free component of your benefit.

Paying your arrears

You can repay your contribution arrears (and any interest owing on those arrears, if applicable) by a lump sum payment at any time prior to your exit from the scheme. Payments by cheque should be made payable to State Super.

However, it is important to remember that if you have to pay interest on the outstanding contributions, then the interest continues to accrue on the amount owing until the debt is fully paid.

Contribution arrears and interest can also be paid when you exit the scheme by a part commutation of a pension benefit, a reduction in a lump sum benefit or a combination of both.
