Annual Member Satisfaction Survey results are in

We would like to thank all our members who provided feedback as part of our 2020 annual member satisfaction survey, which was conducted in December last year.

We received very positive results in all areas of service delivery and when compared to the broader superannuation industry, our results sit well above the industry standard in overall satisfaction, telephone service, interview service, communication, annual statements, seminars and financial planning. You rated us highest for:

Source: State Super Member Satisfaction Research 2020, Woolcott Research & Engagement. Ratings out of 10.

This annual research, together with the comments and insights that we receive from our members, has become an integral part of our future planning and will help us continue to identify ways to improve the services we provide to you.

Member Advisory Forum provides insight into member views

The inaugural Member Advisory Forum in October 2020 was a virtual event that demonstrated State Super's ongoing commitment to connecting with members and providing a platform for sharing their views.

Views on public sector super

Current and former members, including pension members, from the NSW Department of Education discussed the question "What insights from your experience as a teacher and a public sector superannuation scheme member should inform future retirement income policy?"

Key themes from the discussion on this topic were:

Super was an unknown factor in choosing a career

Super was not top of mind for these members when choosing their occupation and entering the workforce, but there was a suggestion that people attracted to public service may tend to value a greater sense of security.

Young workers must take an active interest in their super

Members think there is still low awareness of super and finances generally amongst young workers today. They believe it would make a real difference to a young person's future financial security if they understood the benefits of and how to approach their super.

High level of comfort from having a defined benefit pension

Forum attendees who were eligible for a pension believe their defined benefit pension provides comfort in times of uncertainty, and they have been able to reliably plan and adjust their lifestyle accordingly.

Limits could be placed on lump sum payments

While members value the income stream, they believe it is important that they have the choice of taking a lump sum. Some think there is value in restricting lump sums, but uncertainty around life expectancy makes this a bit difficult.

There could be some alternatives such as allowing lump sum at age 65-70 once a person has a better idea of their living situation. Or mandating that some (or all) of a lump sum be taken as an income stream, because some people will not manage their money as effectively.

Objective advice is needed five years before retirement

Members told us that the 5 years leading to retirement is when they began to attend seminars and see financial advisers. They believe that it's important to seek objective advice that is accurate and carefully explained to inform retirement planning. Without this advice, there is a risk of people acting without understanding the gravity of their decisions.

Views on responsible investment

Members also discussed the question, "What are the special requirements for a public sector superannuation fund on matters of responsible investment?" Key themes that came out of their discussions on this topic were:

Provide easy access to information

Members told us that as a public sector fund, State Super must lead by example and ensure transparency of its investments. We need to make it easy to find investment information that is easy to understand so that members can make informed decisions.

Long-term focus on more than financial best interests

Members say there is a need to balance returns with social, environmental, and national sustainability. They know that some of these investments are long-term and this focus should include engagement with younger fund members to help them make the best decisions for their future.

Consider a broad definition of 'responsible'

Our members at the Forum told us that super funds should take a more strategic approach to future-proofing our economy, such as investing in our national research and development sector and investing in Australian companies.

Responsible investment also means environmental amenity, sustainability, quality, and equity. Investing in companies that have quality management, that genuinely care for their people and have a sense of 'Australian-ness' at their core.

If you are interested in participating in a future Member Advisory Forum, email your full name, and current or previous job title to info@statesuper.nsw.gov.au and we will respond with the event details as soon as they are confirmed. Places are limited, so be sure to contact us as soon as possible.

2020 - an unprecedented year

The year began with considerable uncertainty arising from the pandemic, as realisation of its magnitude began to emerge. Those early fears were soon moderated thanks to massive fiscal stimulus from governments, record low interest rates and quantitative easing from central banks and exceptionally rapid development of vaccines. Optimism around a quicker than expected global recovery then gathered pace as the year progressed, although a resurgence of infections in late 2020 served as a reminder of how quickly conditions can change.

The better than expected rebound in economies was pre-empted by the strong performance in share markets. An initial sharp decline took place in March, due to the steep economic downturn, but markets rallied in anticipation of recovery and by the end of the year the S&P/ASX 200 had almost recovered to where it had started the year, while in the US the S&P 500 reached record highs at around 500 points ahead for the year.

Confronting the economic challenges

COVID-19 will still hold potential to destabilise recovery over the coming year, especially in USA and Europe where successive waves of increase in infection, virus mutations and death rates have undermined re-opening. Offsetting such negative effects are the potential positive impacts of constrained demand being gradually released, ongoing stimulus measures and the vaccine rollout. The fertile environment created by low interest rates and inflation rates should also spur on recovery, so there is good cause for cautious optimism.

On the domestic front, our aggressive virus control measures and our relatively generous stimulus programs have positioned us well to bounce back into growth. Our exposure to China and other Asian markets also gives us a platform to recover, thanks to the resilience of economies in that region. For example, the Chinese economy posted growth of 2.3% for 2020, despite the sharp downturn at the start of the year.

Factors tempering this outlook include the ongoing trade tensions with China and some uncertainty over how well consumers and businesses will adapt to the phasing out of COVID-19 stimulus.

"Global market expectations on the whole should be positive and Australian shares are in a good position..."

This may cause some patchiness in recovery, but the general outlook is for improvement over the course of this year and the Reserve Bank is forecasting GDP growth of around 3.5% for 2021.

The impacts on property have been mixed. The reduction in immigration and overseas student numbers has resulted in downward pressure on residential accommodation prices in the inner-city areas of Sydney and Melbourne, while the enforced surge on remote working has had the opposite effect on outer suburbs and regional centres.

Global trade dynamics

The global trade tensions of the past few years have persisted during 2020 and despite some positive developments, they are yet to be clearly resolved. The ongoing Brexit negotiations concluded in late December with the European Union and the United Kingdom agreeing to terms. The US-China trade war continued to escalate causing some collateral damage to Australia, as an increasingly strident Beijing implemented penalties on some Australian exports. The end of the Trump era may see a return to a more diplomatic tone from the new US Administration, but this is no guarantee that tensions won't persist for some time yet.

What will 2021 hold for markets?

While the revival in markets during 2020 may have restored some confidence, there is still real potential for short term corrections to occur this year - especially if sudden lockdowns occur due to COVID-19 outbreaks. Such events, however, are likely to only cause short-term volatility and the ongoing economic measures that garnered positive results last year will continue to underpin the growth in asset values in 2021.

Persistently low interest rates will also have the effect of driving demand on share markets, particularly if dividends and earnings yields continue to maintain a healthy margin over bank deposit returns. Global market expectations on the whole should be positive and Australian shares are in a good position to outperform other countries.

Investing in an energy-efficient train

State Super invests in a number of direct property and infrastructure projects on behalf of our members. These assets, which we hold over the long term, are designed to generate strong returns as well as providing protection when markets are turbulent.

You may be surprised that we have interests in infrastructure projects including toll roads, airports, seaports, energy pipelines, water distribution and more, with some of these assets located overseas.

Let's take a look at the award-winning Arlanda Express in Stockholm, Sweden which has some impressive environmental credentials.

The Arlanda Link was built to reduce the environmental impact caused by car and bus travel between Stockholm and Arlanda Airport and to support the sustainable growth of Sweden's largest airport.

Opened by the King and Queen of Sweden in November 1999, after the ribbon-cutting ceremony the royal couple travelled on the new Arlanda Express train in 18 minutes, halving the time taken with other travel options. Since that time, over 86 million passengers have travelled on the link between the city and the airport enjoying a uniquely efficient, comfortable, and environmentally sustainable transport alternative. The route is an integral part of Stockholm regional development. The energy efficient Arlanda Express runs six times an hour during peak periods with the journey taking a maximum of 20 minutes.

Travelling by train is beneficial for the environment as emissions are extremely low. Arlanda Express has been designated by the Swedish Society for Nature Conservation's eco-label "Good Environmental Choice". The trains are operated 100% on "green" electricity, meaning that the electricity comes from renewable energy sources, such as hydropower, wind power and biofuels.

Arlanda Express has a commitment to the environment which has led it to pioneer new technologies and standards for measuring environmental impact. This has included the adoption of a computer-aided train operation (CATO) system to help drivers optimise their energy efficiency. The Arlanda Express was one of the first train operators to use the CATO system, resulting in substantial reductions in energy consumption.

State Super is part of a consortium of institutional investors with substantial experience in making long-term investments in quality infrastructure businesses such as this around the globe. State Super holds approximately 37.5% of the shares in the consortium that owns Arlanda Express.

Are you on track for the retirement you want?

Many of us think about retirement as a 'point in time' in the future. But if you're a few years away from that point in time, getting expert advice can make a big difference to how prepared you are for retirement - both emotionally and financially.

Remember, those who enjoy retirement the most are the ones who have planned it well.

Will my money run out? How much do I need to have saved to live the lifestyle I want in retirement? These are some of the questions most frequently asked by people when thinking about retirement.

Some of these questions are best addressed in the few years leading up to the retirement date, not just 'at the point' of retirement. Financial advice at this point is an important investment in peace of mind that you are getting your retirement right. The superannuation and tax systems are complex, and so are your scheme rules, so, working with an expert early can make a big difference to your retirement outcomes.

How does financial advice in the few years leading to retirement benefit you?

- It could help you uncover opportunities to maximise your benefit.
- Discussing the important questions early could help you save tax or prevent costly mistakes that could exceed the cost of the advice.
- Meeting with a planner can provide you with a reality check on whether there's a gap between what your expectations are, and what you can afford to do.
- You'll be able to put the right strategies in place and get the best outcomes for your retirement.

What can I expect at a first appointment?

As a State Super member, your first appointment with an Aware Super financial planner is free of cost or obligation. It's an opportunity to ask questions and confirm your understanding of how your scheme works, how any change to your working conditions such as working part time or taking long service leave can have an impact on your super. It'll also give you an overview of how the broader retirement system works, and the opportunities and tax benefits of staying within super through retirement. Aware Super planners are as knowledgeable as they are approachable, so you can feel confident in the information they provide to support your decisions.

Partnering with an Aware Super financial planner for personal advice

The first appointment will give you a chance to consider the value in partnering with the planner to create a plan for you that is specific to your needs, goals and situation. There will be a fee for this personal financial plan, and the fee will be discussed with you before any work is commenced.

To prepare your financial plan the planner will take the time to get to know you and your priorities, and look at all the strategies you can consider between now and your retirement date to make sure you're in the best possible position when you stop working. Your planner will discuss not only your financial situation, but also look at other considerations that affect you holistically. They can also advise on your partner's financial situation, even if they are a member of another Super fund.

Some of the topics that will be considered and may be included in your personal financial plan:

- How much income you'll need to fund your lifestyle in retirement
- Understand all your sources of income, including any age pension entitlement
- How long your money will last in retirement using powerful modelling software

- Identify any gaps or shortfall in your retirement savings and your retirement plan, or consider whether you can retire earlier or spend more in retirement
- Help you understand the level of investment risk you are comfortable with and the investment strategies that are right for you
- Give you specific advice about your account to ensure your plans maximise your retirement benefit
- Give you advice about any investments outside your super
- Give you advice on what to do with unused leave balances, take it as leave or receive it as a lump sum
- Advice on paying down debt
- Making additional contributions to super
- Advice to ensure that your personal wishes will be followed in the event of your death and that you've minimised any tax beneficiaries may have to pay

The planner will document the advice and work with you to develop a step-by-step plan for the next few years right up to your retirement date. Importantly it will give you peace of mind that you are on track for a successful retirement.

If you've spent decades working, you can approach retirement with the confidence that you can afford to do the things you want and feel positive about this next stage of your life.

Remember, those who enjoy retirement the most are the ones who have planned it well.

Ask an Expert

Q: I'm 53 and a deferred member, what insurance cover do I have within SASS? Is there a benefit to having my insurance paid through my super rather than outside super?

There is no insurance cover available to deferred members within SASS. If you had opted into Additional Benefit Cover when you were a contributing member, it ceased when you became a deferred member. If you choose to have your insurance within super, you would need to open an account with another super fund and apply for cover within that fund.

Subject to underwriting, Aware Super and most other super funds will offer death, total and permanent disability and income protection insurance, but will not offer trauma insurance.

When insurance is within Super, your premiums are paid from your super account, which may help with cash flow in the short term but may erode your super balance over time leaving you with less savings to fund your lifestyle in retirement. If you don't contribute the premium back into your super, it may end up costing you a lot more in lost investment earnings.

It's also important to note that the insurance policy is between the super fund and the insurer. This means, for example, that the income protection insurance premiums are not a personal tax deduction for you as an individual, they are a tax deduction for the super fund and would be passed on to you in the premium taken out of your super account.

Death insurance claims within super are paid out to beneficiaries in the same way as your super balance. The beneficiary or beneficiaries will be determined by whether you have a binding or non-binding nomination in place. If the benefit is paid to a non-dependent beneficiary, there may be additional tax payable by them.

This information is general and has not considered your objectives, financial situation, or needs. It is not personal advice. You own objectives, financial situation and needs should be considered prior to acting. You should obtain financial advice from a suitably qualified adviser and Insurance advice from a qualified Insurance Adviser.

There are several important considerations in choosing insurance cover in or outside super including:

- your cashflow situation
- different features and definitions between insurance policies
- whether premiums are a tax deduction
- how any insurance claim proceeds will be taxed
- estate planning considerations.

An Aware Super insurance advice specialist<sup>1</sup> can advise you on the right level of cover, whether to fund premiums through super or not, the type of cover and the policies to suit your personal situation.

Q: I'm 62 and I'm planning to retire in July, and I'll cash out my SASS Deferred account as a lump sum. It'll give me time to think about my options and work out how much I need to have in the bank to live on. Is there anything I need to consider if I want to put some money back into Super?

There's a few things that are important for you to consider in the lead up to your retirement date.

The first is access to your Super. At age 62 you will need to leave an employment arrangement to meet a Commonwealth condition of release. As you are over age 60, there will be no personal income tax to pay on the amount you withdraw.

The second thing you need to consider is whether taking your money out as a cash lump sum is the right decision. Remember, Superannuation is essentially a tax structure designed to provide you tax benefits in retirement. Once you instruct State Super to pay the money into your bank account, it is no longer within the Superannuation system, any income you earn on that money will be included in your taxable income and you'll pay tax at your marginal rate. If you decide to put the money back into Super, you will be restricted by the concessional and non-concessional contributions caps. Once you hit 67, putting extra money into your super account becomes more difficult as you need to prove you are gainfully employed, which means satisfying the superannuation work test.

You may be better off leaving your money within the Superannuation system which means:

- leaving your money deferred within SASS until you decide how much you need to live on and how you want to invest it. The downsides of this option are that you won't be able to make partial lump sum withdrawals from the account.

- rolling over the benefit from your SASS account to another complying Super fund such as Aware Super. The advantage of this option is that you would have access to partial lump sum withdrawals, and you can roll your money into the retirement phase of Super by commencing a retirement income stream. The advantage of this phase is that there is no tax on investment earnings within the account whilst you still receive a benefit from any franked dividends received on the underlying investments. An income stream would pay you a regular income as well as give you the flexibility to make additional lump sum withdrawals. You get to choose how the money is invested from a range of investment options. The only downside is that depending on your age, you would be required to withdrawal a minimum amount as a regular income.

The third thing you need to think about is whether retirement is going to be affordable, which means having clarity about how much income you are going to need to fund the lifestyle you have planned, the sources of the income you can draw on including whether you'll access some or all of the age pension, how you'll invest your savings, the amount of investment risk you are prepared to take and how long your money is going to last.

That's why we think it's a good idea to have a clear plan before you retire, working with a financial planner who can give you support, expert advice and peace of mind that you've made the right decisions, and the best chance that your money is going to last throughout your retirement.

" You may be better off leaving your money within the Superannuation system..."
